Heard and Seen at Advertiser Office

Mrs. Helen Swan: "Thanks very much for the puzzle page prize I received some time ago. I got a nice new watch and it is very much pleased."

B. Cummings: "There, I have the distinction of being the first man to pay his auto tax for 1931."

Cummings has retained the same number for some years.

Presented, Tuesday, with a bouquet of large asters and some very handsome flowers have been this season. Thanks.

Ames, Water Street, has let some pumpkins ripen for seed and sales. He showed us two, each weighing in length. The largest three pounds, both tipped the five and three-fourths pounds.

World's Fair Association at Norway is passing through deep water. The fall shows in the state. On the return something is due.

Read the article, "What Is the Situation Regarding the World's Fair?" in this week's paper.

Have speeded up and we are more on our grandfathers ever pretend. Fifty years ago Ames, the doctor, made a record in the state.

Today that performance is not even at many of our small fairs. The marks for the men are made in racing conditions and the taken without great enthusiasm.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Loubis of Philadelphia have been recent guests of Rev. and Mrs. C. B. Rhee.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Leavitt have returned home from a few days spent at Mr. Leavitt's home in the state.

Reminiscences of Eccentrics. By Dr. F. E. Mitchell, Alton, N. H.

The doctor lives in and about "the Switzerland of America." He is comfortably situated, a city water commissioner, ex-hotel man—who made money and some fame in running a "Country Hotel" in New York City—he tells of Mrs. Marilla M. Bicker, well known in that section and other places. He says:

Mrs. Marilla M. Bicker, I knew her quite well. She was looked upon hereabouts as an eccentric; received no sympathy from the majority; had few intimate friends; was financially independent and so cared nothing at all for the opinion of other people.

The fact remains, however, that she had a great mind and was far in advance of her time. She wore her hair short because she thought it more sensible, and her dresses shorter than the prevailing style; but nowadays women wear shorter hair and more abbreviated dresses. She believed that women who paid taxes should have a vote and a voice in the management of affairs. For many years she paid her taxes under protest, charging that taxation without representation was unfair and unconstitutional.

She was born Young, in the adjoining town of New Durham, where my people lived for two hundred years or so. Her ashes were mingled with earth under an apple tree in her native town, at the home where she was born.

Marilla once wrote an article which was published in the Farmington (N. H.) News. I replied to it; she answered and for a number of months we had it back and forth. I was declared the winner, but Marilla was right and I have regretted that I ever defended the myths and fables; although I was sincere and believed what I wrote at the time.

Many tales were told of this woman; one that Hannah Hamlin and she were intimate. She was for many years in Washington and knew many of the famous men. It is said that she once gave a Virginia Senator a rap, he having asked her what New Hampshire could raise.

"Bees," said she, "it can raise anything that Virginia can raise except hell and jackasses."

And when Senator Bailey of Texas asked:

"How did it happen that a large, fine looking woman like you came from a little State like New Hampshire?"

And she replied:

"Senator Bailey, if New Hampshire was ironed out as flat as Kansas it would be twice the size of Texas."

But these are tales; I know nothing of their verity.

When a boy I viewed her with considerable awe. She was a majestic mien and appearance; wore good dress; was calm and deliberate in movement and manner. I often saw her sitting in the grocery store, surrounded by the principal men of the town. She was calm and informed; could argue about anything of importance and usually came out with honors.

It is said that she argued a case in Washington. Roscoe Conklin being opposing counsel. Conklin argued at length. She arose and said, "Gentlemen of the jury, I'll follow the example of my illustrious opponent and—say nothing!"

She won the case.

A letter received states that John Hogan, editor of Dover (N. H.) Tribune is probably has her literary effects. He wrote many articles for the Tribune. Hogan was always pleased to publish her tirades against Theodore Roosevelt, and similar matters.

I never learned the cause of her dislike of T. R., but imagine that he snubbed her in some way. She would snub that. She was a fighter, as everyone must be in this world to get notice or position.

Take a ride in the subway. You'll find it is a case of shove or be shoved. The rule, subterfuge, relying on the power of person is never more than a feeder for those who are more forceful. Just watch pigs at feeding time. There is always one more fat than the others—always one more than than any of the others. The fat one is the best fighter, the most selfish, the most determined.

Ice remains on the trees. This is the sixth day, real loss and inconvenience. The 25th does not look inviting to me, although I have an invitation to dinner. Philosophy? Common sense! Understanding of the natural sequence of life! Even the most brilliant star on the human stage must eventually retire.

Household Clearance

Many a prudent housewife has found it profitable to call upon the Advertiser Want Ads to effect a household clearance sale.

In many homes there are stored away disused articles of household equipment, sewing machines, baby carriages, articles of furniture and even personal apparel and other individual things—all of which may be quickly turned into ready cash.

By taking advantage of the Intelligence Column Ads, a market may be developed for all used articles that may have any intrinsic value.

A household clearance sale, conducted through Advertiser Want Ads, has been the means of ridding many a household of discarded articles.

Advertisements placed in this paper will bring buyer and seller together. Use them—the cost is small.

INTELLIGENCE COLUMN RATES: 25 words or less one week, 25c; second week, 15c; and 10c each week thereafter. Each word more than 25, one cent per word each week.

Highway Beautification

That the New England states must make organized efforts to protect and enhance their natural beauties as a stimulus to their recreational industry was the declaration of James P. Taylor, addressing a meeting of the Maine State Federation of Women's Clubs. Mr. Taylor is secretary of the Vermont State Chamber of Commerce and of the New England Council's Committee on Highway Beautification.

"New England can lead the nation if the other New England states officially in this movement."

join directly in this movement," Mr. Taylor declared. The speaker quoted a letter from a woman's club in a New England village, which stated that the club plans to adopt a program covering period of years for the beautification of the village and the approaching ways, and that they desire "some efficient person to study the situation and to advise us." "Such a call for expert advice," said Mr. Taylor, "finds an echo in every New England community and can be answered only when every New Englander drops the staff of his business."

The New Pastor Arrives—Charley Slips a Cog

Allen Raymond, about the time of his coming to Alderburg to take his parish, put in his appearance as a desirable boarding place in the family, for he thought it not proper thing for a minister to be housed in a public house. He had hoped to be housed at the Benton homestead, but of that household and his plans, he had no word when the gentleman called on Mr. Benton. He was referred to Mr. Whitman, the leading citizen of the town, who had secured for him rooms at Mrs. Harris', should he desire to take them. Mr. Benton, however, took the feelings, and warmly welcomed the new landlady and her amiable daughter, Miss Josephine, and was in some of the warmest and most pleasant of the house. He was down, and the waves of desolation rolled over their once magnificent cities and marts of trade.

He did—rather than upon what he possessed to believe or assented to. The life he lived—whether he was a kind husband or a loving father—a good neighbor—an exemplary citizen, and a patriot, was the all important matter.

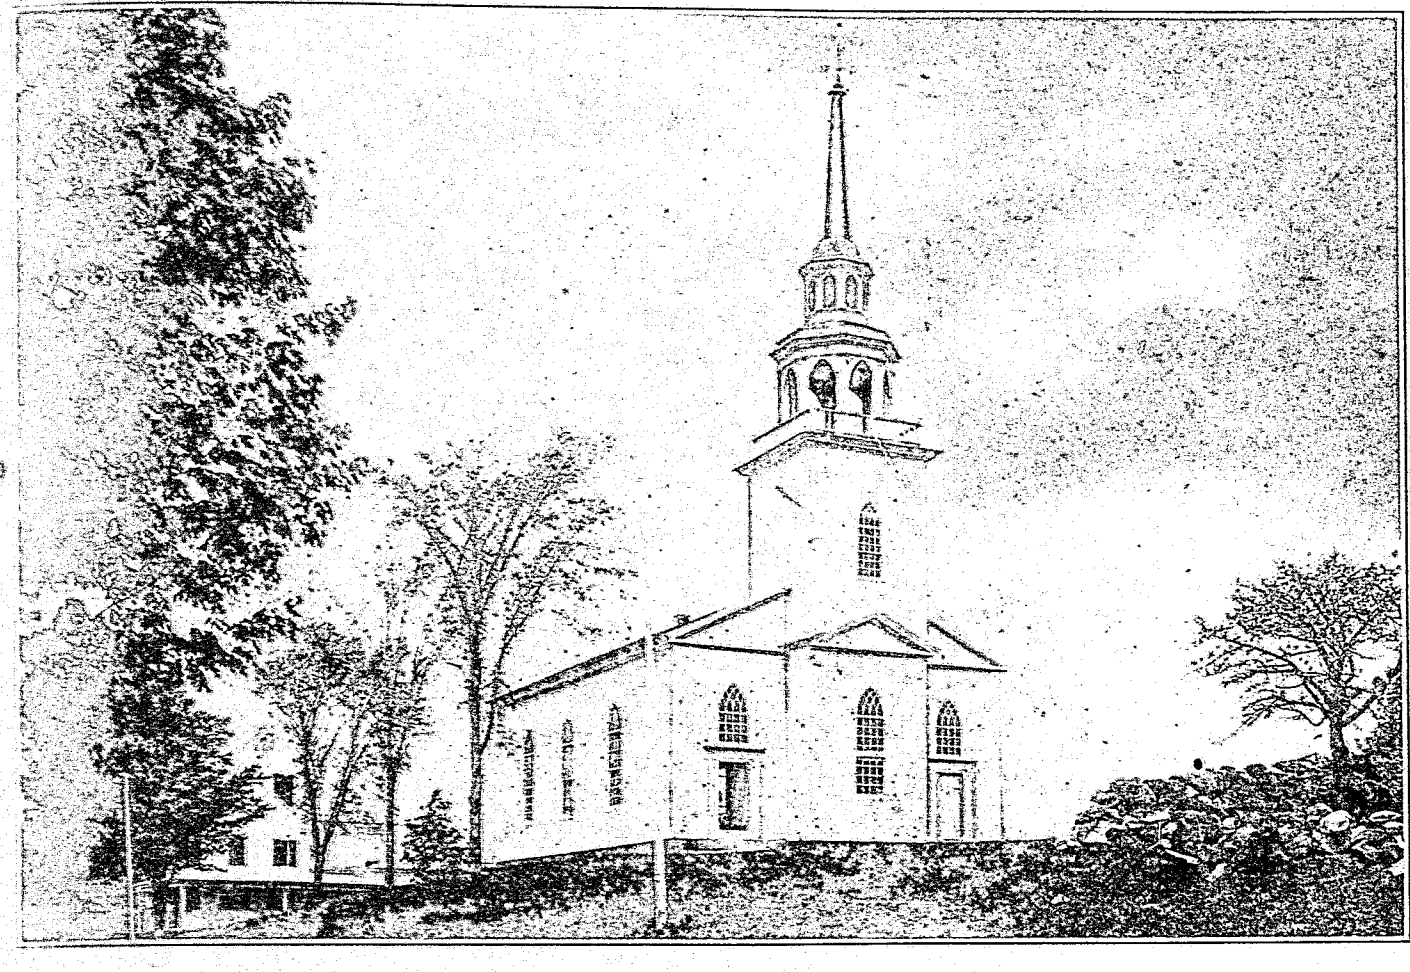

Man was put here for some wise purpose. We may not know, only in part, what that purpose is, but nothing seems more reasonable than that it was for preparation—for development to fit him for an existence in a better life. He must in any rational view, go into the next world much as he leaves this. The common vicious cannot hope to enter it on the same footing as the thoroughly good individual. It is therefore incumbent upon man to fit himself while here, by living a blameless life—doing good—thinking good thoughts and keeping the baser sentiments and passions, out of his mind and heart. The Great Teacher, by his example and precepts, has shown man how to live and there is no excuse for his not knowing what to do, or for his going astray.

God appears to have planted in great wrongs, seeds that spring up and overgrow them. This, then, is one kind of a judgment. The world's history is full of such events. The robber nations of the ancient world, for their iniquities, went down, and the waves of desolation rolled over their once magnificent cities and marts of trade.

Alderburg's "Cradle of Liberalism" was not a member of the society. He was willing, on account of the fact that he was singing in the church, to contribute liberally towards its support as well as his own society, Mr. Benton did not seem to see to do so as would be expected of a man in his position. He should have received the new clergyman into his home. Mr. Cyrus Wilkins, however, the man to be the leader in affairs affecting the interests of his own society. He was capable and liked the position, and now that he was certain of the support of Mr. Benton and Justice Raymond, he took hold of the matter with great zeal.

As Justice Sydney was a constant caller on the same place, as before noted, Mr. Raymond was very certain to hear of his own society, Mr. Benton did not seem to see to do so as would be expected of a man in his position. He should have received the new clergyman into his home. Mr. Cyrus Wilkins, however, the man to be the leader in affairs affecting the interests of his own society. He was capable and liked the position, and now that he was certain of the support of Mr. Benton and Justice Raymond, he took hold of the matter with great zeal.

The new preacher called on the principal families in the parish and at Justice Raymond's and Mr. Benton's. At the latter place he was much on his assistance, but he did not seem to see to do so as would be expected of a man in his position. He should have received the new clergyman into his home. Mr. Cyrus Wilkins, however, the man to be the leader in affairs affecting the interests of his own society. He was capable and liked the position, and now that he was certain of the support of Mr. Benton and Justice Raymond, he took hold of the matter with great zeal.

As the preacher entered from a side door, the organ under Sydney's fingers, rang out its voluntary, and as the last strains died away, the quartette sang the first stanza of that splendid hymn beginning:

"He has come! He has come."

The pastor's prayer was tender and touching. He sought, he declared, help from on high that he might properly minister to the spiritual needs of the good people, with whom he was in the future to abide. He had come to them by chance, and they had received him with great cordiality, and taken him into their hearts. He must and should not fail to be to them what they had expected him to be. In the Providence of God, there were no accidents. There must be some purpose beyond their understanding why he had come to them, but after a time their slight might be clarified and what was then hidden might become apparent, and he felt that he had been called to them for their and his great good. The choir then sang: "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow." The preacher's sermon was from this text: "By their fruits ye shall know them." He spoke without notes, with an earnestness and eloquence that impressed all with his sincerity and great ability. He said in part: "It was recognized by all leaders of modern thought that one's words were dependent upon what he was—what

There is a like judgment that comes to the bad man. He and his kind may exist upon the earth for a period, but eventually, like the beast of the field, they utterly disappear and are forgotten. The baser and meaner thoughts and things are fleeting. It's only the purer, higher and best that endure."

At the close of the clergyman's sermon the choir sang:

"We shall know as we know,
When the mists have cleared away."

The benediction followed. As the large audience filed out of the church, many of the prominent citizens congratulated the clergyman upon the great and good impression his sermon had made, while others deeply moved, silently, but warmly, pressed his hand.

Mr. Benton was much satisfied with the services, and particularly the fine effect of the quartette and male, at their first effort, and he said: "Now, my children, you four must go home with us to dinner," which invitation, of course, was accepted by Betty and Tom, and the custom was generally followed thereafter.

The succeeding Sabbaths were but a repetition of the first in popular favor and interest and the church continued to have crowded congregations. No such preaching and singing had been heard in Alderburg within the memory of the oldest inhabitant. The clergyman's sermons were pitched on a high moral plane, and the necessity of keeping an unblemished life, the singing touched the heart and thrilled the soul—a splendid counterpart to good sermonizing. The community felt the uplift and rallied to its influence.

As time went on, Mr. Raymond became more and more attentive to Maude. She did not encourage his attentions, though outwardly she flattered by them, as he was so talented and gave promise of future eminence as a preacher of the gospel. And she was piqued that Tom took so little notice of her and was so cool and formal towards her. As the minister's attentions to Maude became more marked, Tom's coolness increased, and he kept out of her way all that he possibly could. This was noticed with great regret by Mr. and Mrs. Benton, who saw no way to change the unpleasant situation, which just at that time was complicated by a serious estrangement between Charley and Tom.

Charley had been urging Tom to join his social club, and upon two occasions he had gone with him to the club room, but finding that the leading spirits of the association there were too convivial, pleasure loving and of easy virtue, and were having a bad influence on Charley, Tom refused to associate with them and kindly advised Charley to quit meeting with them. Mr. Benton had noticed the same thing in his son, also, and feared his efforts to associate with them, who considered nothing of moment, but pleasure and having a good time were, Ned Osborn, Amos Cotton and Ted Landers, he Osborn was the one who had the most influence over Charley.

The quartette's rehearsals had been held on Friday evenings when Charley had gone for Betty and Tom and taken them to the Benton home. But one Friday evening he failed to show up at the appointed time. Tom was in his room waiting for him. Betty, getting very impatient, went to see Tom to find out if he knew where Charley was. Tom was just as much in the dark as she was as to Charley's non-appearance, he said, but suspecting what the matter was, and that the crisis in his friend's life had come, he determined to keep the truth from Betty and Charley's folks and save him, if he could, should he find his suspicious correct, so he dissembled and told her that Charley no doubt had been prevented from some pressing cause from coming for them, and that for this one time, they could have the rehearsal at the church Sunday morning, an hour before the services began. This seemed to satisfy Betty, and she went back to her own room, but Tom's words did not quiet her perturbed spirit, as will appear. Tom put on his hat and left the house, and on the way he dropped into a confectionery store and bought a cigar and obtained a card of matches.

On entering the club room, he found his worst fears realized. The young fellows were drinking. Charley, catching sight of Tom, set down his half drained glass and said:

"Hello Tom, glad to see ye. Have a drink? 'Twill do ye good,—you need it." His talk was somewhat thick and his movements unsteady. Tom slipped his arm within Charley's, kindly saying: "Come outside a few minutes, Charley. I have something important to say to you."

"Can't ye say it here, Tom?"

"No, Charley, can't talk about serious matters here," and Charley suffered himself to be led from the room. As they went into the street, the cool air served to brace and steady Charley's movements and seeing some persons on the opposite sidewalk. Tom hurried him away towards Round Cap, the highest point of land northeast of the mills. Charley wanted to know where Tom was taking him to and was told to Round Cap, where no one would see what condition he was in, and that he mustn't be shouting out circumstances, as he would attract the attention of the people who chanced to see them.

Charley: "Then what did you take me away from the boys for?"

Tom: "Betty was concerned about you, and I came from the house to see why you did not come after us for the rehearsal."

Charley: "Oh Betty, dear, I forgot her. Does she know? Oh what have I done? You won't tell her, Tom?"

Tom: "No, Charley, but I trust this is the last time you will be in this condition. But let us hurry and get up the hill."

In fifteen minutes, after leaving the club room, they reached the top and found a place to sit down. Tom felt quite confident that no one on the way had seen them to determine who they were. He lit the cigar and handed it to Charley, who asked:

"What is this for? I've never smoked in my life."

Tom: "That's just the reason, I want you to smoke now. It will make you sick enough to throw up the stuff that you drank so that you can go home."

At the first efforts to smoke, the cigar dropped out of Charley's unsteady hands, but with Tom's assistance, he was able to retain it long enough, between his lips, to take some half a dozen whiffs and soon he became so nauseated that he retched a few times and threw out the liquid which remained in his stomach. In the course of an hour Charley was in a condition to go home. Tom went with him to say some plain things to him. He turned him of the consequences which would result from his keeping up his connection with the members of the club; the disgrace and sorrow that it would bring to his folks; the probable breaking off of his connection with Betty and the strained relations that would follow between themselves. Charley wanted to know whether Tom would keep his mouth shut so that his folks and Betty wouldn't know of his slooping, and Tom assured him that no one would ever know about it through him and that he would have to take part of the blame for their non-appearance for the rehearsal, as he could make no explanations to anyone. He was willing to bear all of the blame, he said, if Charley would give up his membership in the club and promise never to indulge in any more drinking. This latter part Charley readily assented to, for he declared that he didn't like the taste of strong liquors, but demurred at giving up his membership in the club, saying that he could keep up his association with the boys there without drinking and that he liked Ned Osborn, who had been his classmate at school, and had graduated with him at the same academy. But Tom would not yield on this point and leave the way open for Charley to take another fall. They had some time before, reached the lawn at the Benton house, and Tom, finding further persuasion useless, said at parting:

"I've said all to you, Charley, that is necessary. Our relations will be strained if you allow yourself again to be led into temptation. You have been my closest and best friend—as near as a brother, in fact—now think it over carefully, whether you want to throw me over for Ned Osborn." So they parted.

Maude, who had set up for Charley, to learn why there had been no rehearsal, saw the young men come into the yard. Tom was earnestly saying something that Charley did not like and as he entered the house, the following colloquy took place between him and his sister:

Community Fair

Welchville the Scene of a Largely Attended Fall Fair

Horse pulling, dimesy and dancing were features at the community fair held around Oxford Grange Hall at Welchville, Saturday.

The show started early with refreshment tents and shopping booths being erected to cater when the crowd gathered. In the upstairs hall an attractive show was arranged by a busy committee including J. V. Hunting, Mrs. Mabel Brett, John P. Hall, Dining room committee: Mrs. Katherine Staples. Dinner committee: Mrs. Alice Tyner, Mrs. A. L. Chaplin, Mrs. Clara Bowker.

There were large displays of vegetables in collections and individual entries. Apples were conspicuous and nicely arranged for the best effect. Judges in this department were George Tyner of Oxford and E. R. Cobb, Auburn.

Fancy work of all kinds made an attractive display and many other articles of needlecraft and crocheting were shown in past years. Mrs. George McKean, Mrs. A. L. Keene and Mrs. Ray P. Hall were the judges.

Antiques formed a fine display and were from the collection of Mrs. C. Greenlaw, Mrs. A. L. Chaplin and Ray Hall. There were all sorts of rare coins, dishes and pottery. An old fashioned churn and a few other articles attracted much attention. Many quaint and curious articles were interesting for their novelty and historical background.

There was a large turn-out for dinner at noon in the grange hall, with plenty of beans and brown bread, pastry and cake, served in the customary grange style.

Pulling horses on the side road was a heated affair with nine pairs in competition. According to the rules at this fair, each team is hitched to a load according to its weight, namely, a pound and a half of stone to a pound of horse. Following is the result:

A. B. Grover, Welchville, weight of team 5320 pounds, distance 113 ft., 8 in.
A. B. Grover, team 3280, distance 189 ft., 8 in.

Woodrow Grover, team 2480, distance 119 ft., 5 in.
S. E. Coolidge, team 3290, distance 99 ft., 5 in.

L. E. Brown, Norway, team 2700, distance 249 feet.
Fred Newcomb, team 2430, distance 70 ft., 5 in.

E. S. Bean, team 2840, distance 93 ft.
R. M. Tyner, team 2920, distance 76 ft.

Judges: A. W. Weston, Bolster's Mills and Sam Dudley, Oxford.
Dancing attracted a crowd to the hall in the evening as the finishing touches to one of the most successful shows given by Oxford Grange. Other committees responsible for the success of the fair

Waterman's
Pick a school child's pen carefully--it's important to start him right

Good handwriting is a business and social asset. Start your child right. Learn how important it is that every school child should have a good pen with just the right type of pen point. Waterman's make their own pen points themselves.

There's a Waterman's to suit every purse. The pens illustrated are $4 and $5—many others higher or lower in price. All are fine writing instruments—and all will write even better if you use Waterman's Ink. For school use Waterman's new Blue Ink is particularly good—a clear, bright blue, easy to read and easy on the eyes.

Every Waterman's is guaranteed forever against defects. Service Stations are maintained at the address below for the purpose of making good our guarantee and for servicing our pens as required.
